War of Words: Guv Ravi, Stalin in another round

Chennai, Oct 7: In the latest war of words between Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.K. Stalin and Governor R.N. Ravi, the Governor remarked that the state appeared determined to keep fighting - whether it was against delimitation, NEET, or even him. Taking a dig at the government, Ravi asked rhetorically who Tamil Nadu was actually fighting, asserting there was "no enemy" and "no conflict".

Speaking at the 202nd Avatar Day celebrations of Saint Thiruvalluvar at Raj Bhavan on Sunday, Ravi said he was deeply inspired by Vallalar's message of Sanmarga - the path of righteousness rooted in compassion and equality. Pointing to the DMK's slogan "Tamil Nadu Poraadam" (Tamil Nadu is fighting), Ravi said, "As I travel across Tamil Nadu, I see walls painted with the words 'Tamil Nadu Poraadam'. My question is - fighting with whom? There is no enemy, no conflict here. Tamil Nadu is not under attack. We must live in harmony and erase such divisive thoughts from our minds."

Stalin swiftly responded with a detailed post on X in Tamil, listing what he said the state would continue to resist - Hindi imposition, religious fanaticism, delimitation, NEET, and the Governor himself. In a veiled reference to the Supreme Court's ruling that called Ravi's delay in assenting to ten state bills "illegal and unconstitutional," Stalin turned the Governor's question back on him.

"Who will Tamil Nadu fight against?" the Governor has asked," Stalin began, before firing a series of sharp retorts. "Tamil Nadu is fighting against the arrogance that says education funds will come only if Hindi is accepted! It is fighting against those who infiltrate educational institutions meant for scientific inquiry with superstition and backward ideas, dragging our youth a century behind."

He continued, "It is fighting against the cunning groups steeped in religious fanaticism, who obstruct the nation's progress at every step. We are fighting in court to defend state rights against the Governor's unconstitutional interference. We are fighting those who seek to undermine the Constitution's dignity and those plotting to divert industries, growth, and job opportunities meant for Tamil Nadu to other states."

Heavy rain likely in six Tamil Nadu Dists

Chennai, Oct 7: The Regional Meteorological Centre (RMC) in Chennai has forecast heavy rainfall in six districts of Tamil Nadu on Tuesday. Nilgiris, Erode, Krishnagiri, Dharmapuri, Salem, and Namakkal are expected to receive intense showers at one or two locations in the coming hours, the department said.

In its latest weather advisory, the RMC also warned of moderate rain and thundershowers in several other districts, including Ariyalur, Perambalur, Thanjavur, Tiruvallur, and Tiruchi. Pudukkottai, Cuddalore, and Nagapattinam are likely to experience light to moderate rain accompanied by lightning. Chennai and nearby districts - Tiruvallur, Chengalpattu, and Villupuram - may witness light rainfall and occasional thunderstorms. Several areas have already experienced early-morning showers, leading to waterlogging in low-lying regions. In Villupuram district, Senji, Singavaram, and Ooranthalang witnessed more than an hour of rain, flooding several stretches. At the Senji four-way junction, rainwater mixed with sewage, creating challenges for motorists.

In Tirupattur district, stagnant water on the Vaniyambadi highway slowed down vehicular movement. Residents in the area have renewed their demand for the construction of a proper stormwater drainage system.

GLOBAL VOICE

Greece takes over as head of EU FMs groups

In a development unimaginable a decade ago, Greek Finance Minister Kyriakos Piarrakakis was on Thursday elected president of the Eurogroup, the influential collective of Finance Ministers from the 20 EU nations that use the euro. The appointment marks a symbolic milestone for Greece, which once stood on the brink of expulsion from the eurozone during its deepest financial crisis.

The Eurogroup, though an informal body, wields substantial influence over the economic policy of euro-area nations and plays a decisive role in shaping financial stability across the bloc. Its president's statements are closely watched by markets and governments alike.

Among the first to congratulate Piarrakakis was Latvia's Finance Minister Arvils Aseradens, who wished him success in steering the Eurogroup "to evolve, adapt and meet the challenges ahead with clarity, purpose and strong collective commitment," in a message posted on X.

Piarrakakis, 42, is widely viewed as one of the rising figures in Greece's ruling New Democracy party. He became finance minister in March after a two-year stint heading the education ministry. As minister of digital governance between 2019 and 2023, he won acclaim for sweeping reforms that cut red tape and shifted vast segments of Greece's public services online.

Greece's election to the Eurogroup's top post is particularly striking given its fraught history with the body. When the financial crisis erupted in 2009, successive Eurogroup chiefs frequently visited Athens, their brief statements parsed anxiously for clues about Greece's economic future.

The most dramatic episode unfolded in January 2015, when newly appointed Finance Minister Yanis Varoufakis publicly clashed with then Eurogroup president Jeroen Dijsselbloem. Following a tense press meet in which Varoufakis declared that Greece would not negotiate with its bailout lenders, Dijsselbloem leaned in to whisper something as they shook hands. Varoufakis' expression darkened instantly, fuelling speculation and symbolising Greece's strained and unequal relations with its creditors. Years of runaway spending had left Greece locked out of international bond markets, forcing it to rely on three massive bailouts supervised by the so-called troika - the IMF, European Central Bank, and European Commission. The financial rescue came with severe austerity conditions that plunged Greece into a deep depression. The economy shrank by 25 per cent, unemployment hit 28 per cent in 2013, and youth unemployment soared to nearly 60 per cent. Salaries and pensions were slashed, homelessness increased, and Athens' streets were frequently rocked by violent protests.

The crisis peaked in June 2015, when Greece nearly tumbled out of the eurozone. To prevent a bank run, the government imposed capital controls, restricting ATM withdrawals, limiting account access and curbing the flow of money. Within days, Greece became the first developed nation to default on an IMF repayment, missing a USD 1.8 billion instalment. These financial restrictions were lifted only in 2019.

A decade on, Greece has executed one of Europe's most remarkable economic turnarounds. All major rating agencies have restored the country's bonds to investment grade, and in 2024, Greece was among just six EU nations to post a budget surplus. Government revenues have exceeded projections this year, enabling the prime minister to announce a 1.6 billion euro (USD 1.88 billion) tax relief package in September.

Yet challenges persist. Many Greek households continue to struggle with rising living costs. Farmers, frustrated by soaring production expenses, low wholesale prices and delays in EU-backed subsidy payments following a corruption scandal, have mounted nationwide protests, blocking major highways.

Piarrakakis succeeds Makis Keravnos of Cyprus, who had been serving as acting Eurogroup president after Ireland's Paschal Donohoe resigned in November to take up a role at the World Bank.

For Greece, the elevation of a national finance minister to the helm of the Eurogroup is more than a political achievement - it is a powerful symbol of recovery from years of despair, austerity and uncertainty.

World Bank aid to strengthen primary healthcare

The Sri Lankan government has signed a financial agreement with the International Development Association (IDA) of the World Bank Group to secure USD150 million worth of funds, for financing a nationwide project aimed at upgrading the country's primary healthcare system, the government said.

The project, set to run from 2024 -2028 across all districts of the island nation, will focus primarily on preventing and managing non-communicable diseases, expanding elderly and palliative care, strengthening community-level services, and improving resilience to climate-related emergencies, reports News Wire.

A major operational challenge identified during the planning phase was the shortage of transport facilities for frontline health workers, including Public Health Midwives, public health inspectors, primary care nurses and disease-surveillance teams.

In a bid to address this hurdle, the Cabinet of Ministers has approved a proposal from the Health and Mass Media Minister for the procurement of a large fleet of vehicles to operational support on the field, boost home-based care, enhance community outreach, and ensure the safe transportation of medical supplies and clinical waste.

The approved fleet includes: 26 clinical waste transport lorries, 26 double cab vehicles, 5 ten-seater vans, 2 buses with 42 seats each, 2,891 scooters for Public Health Midwives, with over 200 scooters for Public Health Nurses, and 1,350 motorcycles for public health inspectors.

Additional parts of the fleet include: 200 scooters for laboratory services, 20 trucks with refrigerators for the Medical Supply Division, 8 forklifts for the Medical Supply Division, 1 crew cab for the Divisional Health Office - Puttalam, as well as an ambulance fleet for the Jaffna district. As per officials, the initiative is expected to significantly improve the efficiency of fieldwork, broaden community health coverage, and strengthen the overall primary health care infrastructure in Sri Lanka, as the country works towards the modernisation of its healthcare system

Trinity Mirror Online Team :-

The geopolitical dynamic surrounding the Ukraine conflict has pivoted, placing Europe in an unprecedented and uncomfortable position. Faced with a Russian military machine that, though suffering heavy casualties, is showing increased momentum on the battlefield, the continent's security is now directly hostage to the domestic politics of the United States.

The Trump administration's new National Security Strategy has sent a clear, acrimonious message across the Atlantic: America's core interest lies in its own "preeminence in the Western Hemisphere," and the days of propping up the global order are over. This doctrine, which views the European Union not as an ally but as a potential source of "civilizational erosion" through its own internal policies, has shocked and enraged European commentators.

The implicit message is transactional: a US-negotiated "expeditious cessation of hostilities in Ukraine" is a core interest, regardless of its terms for Kyiv or Europe's long-term security. Efforts by European leaders to appease Washington - by increasing NATO spending and, critically, surpassing the US in total military aid to Ukraine (roughly €72 billion vs. the US's €65 billion by April) - have seemingly failed to avert this hard-line stance. The result is a dangerous asymmetry: less US protection accompanied by more transactional pressure on trade and internal policies.

Europe's staunch, unified anti-Russia stance, rooted in the shock of the 2022 invasion, is facing a severe test of endurance. While the continent is committed to Ukraine's sovereignty, its military aid momentum has already slowed in the latter half of the year, raising concerns about its ability to permanently fill the enormous gap left by the US draw-down. The sheer scale of the task - the US contributed over half of the annual aid average from 2022-2024 - is overwhelming.

The most complex and high-stakes financial dimension of the Europe-Russia confrontation is the EU's escalating debate over using Russia's sovereign wealth - approximately €210 billion ($245 billion) immobilised in Europe - to fund Ukraine's war and reconstruction needs. This move is driven by the sheer scale of Ukraine's financial requirements and the increasing reluctance of some US factions to commit further aid.

Europe is debating whether the strategic necessity of funding Ukraine and inflicting a cost on Russia outweighs the foundational legal and financial risks to its own international reputation and internal financial order. The decision, expected at the upcoming European Council meeting, is perhaps the most defining financial move of the conflict.

The European Council is set to vote on a crucial €90 billion loan for Ukraine, secured over the frozen Russian Central Bank assets, a plan fiercely opposed by some members like Belgium over fears of legal reprisal and financial risk. Moscow is making painful, incremental gains in Ukraine, and its preferred path is a "business deal" with the US, one that bypasses and undermines Europe's efforts.

Europe now faces an existential dilemma: pursue an expensive and autonomous defense buildup to counter a newly confident Russia, or risk having its security dictated by a transactional US administration that prioritises its own internal and hemispheric interests above transatlantic solidarity. The continent must rapidly transform from a passive recipient of security to an active geopolitical agent, or its future security and sovereignty will remain perilously uncertain.

You can learn more about the ongoing policy debate and challenges in the following video: Behind the negotiating table to end the Russia-Ukraine war. This video discusses the diplomatic challenges, including the different approaches taken by the US, Russia, and European powers in the context of the ongoing conflict.

May join grouping without India: Bangladesh

Bangladesh has stirred a fresh diplomatic debate after its Foreign Affairs Adviser Md. Touhid Hossain remarked that Dhaka could "strategically" join a regional grouping involving Pakistan and China, a possibility widely viewed as sensitive given its potential fallout on ties with India.

His comments came in response to Pakistan's Foreign Minister Ishaq Dar, who told delegates at the recent Islamabad Conclave that a trilateral initiative involving Bangladesh-China-Pakistan was already underway and could eventually expand to include more countries within and outside South Asia.

Reacting cautiously, Touhid said Bangladesh was in a position to consider joining such a formation excluding India, though he added that the same was not feasible for countries like Nepal or Bhutan. "It is possible for us strategically ... but it is not possible for Nepal or Bhutan to form a grouping with Pakistan excluding India," he said, emphasising the geopolitical limitations faced by smaller landlocked neighbours.

Even so, Touhid refrained from offering any clear indication of Bangladesh's current stance. He noted that Dar had merely made a statement and that "perhaps at some point this could see some progress," but stressed that he had no further official comment, having only seen the matter reported in the media.

Thursday's remarks come months after Bangladesh downplayed speculation that it was exploring a new bloc without India. On June 19, Bangladeshi officials had reportedly attended a meeting in Kunming, China, regarding the proposed formation, but the government later dismissed suggestions of a political realignment. At the time, Touhid Hossain had stated plainly: "We are not forming any alliance."

Many strategic experts argue that a regional grouping built around Pakistan and China but excluding India is unlikely to succeed. They point to the collapse of SAARC, formed in 1985 with seven South Asian nations and later expanded to include Afghanistan. The body's operations effectively froze due to the India-Pakistan rivalry, highlighting the difficulty of sustaining cooperation without India's participation.

Professor Swarn Singh, an international relations expert at Jawaharlal Nehru University, noted in an earlier interview with the South China Morning Post that India's dominance in South Asia remains unmatched. India's landmass is seven times larger than Pakistan's, its economy is 12 times bigger, and its foreign exchange reserves exceed Pakistan's by a staggering factor of 45. Its defence budget, he pointed out, is five times that of Pakistan. "These figures give a clear indication of the future of any South Asian regional cooperation initiatives that seek to keep India out," he said.

Experts also underline that smaller nations such as Nepal and Bhutan rely heavily on access to India for their export routes and commercial needs. Despite occasional diplomatic or political differences with New Delhi, neither country is seen as willing to align itself with any formation perceived as anti-India. At most, analysts suggest, they may use discussions of alternative partnerships as a bargaining tool while negotiating trade or connectivity issues with India.

With Dhaka now at the centre of renewed speculation, New Delhi is expected to watch closely whether Bangladesh's guarded remarks translate into any concrete diplomatic movement - or remain merely part of the region's shifting rhetoric amid intensifying geopolitical rivalries.
